LAGOS FILM CITY ALL YOU NEED CITY TO KNOW

Governor Babajide Sanwo-Olu, on Wednesday, laid the first foundation block for the development of Lagos Film City — an ecosystem of creative cinematography, tourism, leisure, entertainment and learning.

The project, being sited on 100-hectares in Ejinrin town in Epe Division, is a legacy infrastructure initiated by the Sanwo-Olu administration to harness local talent and creativity to create new economic opportunities for talented youngsters in culture and entertainment industries.

The State Government sealed a Public-Private Partnership (PPP) with entertainment investors facilitated by Del-York Group to develop the one-stop campus for learning, film production, post-production, visual effects, and other ancillary services that support the filmmaking process.

Ogidi Studios and EbonyLife Cinema are among the indigenous entertainment partners that would work on the project to bring the Governor's vision to reality. Ejinrin, a coastal boundary town, literally became a beehive during the groundbreaking held at the site of the $100 million project.

LAGOS FILM CITY

“The construction of a film city in Lagos, Nigeria, has the potential to bring about numerous benefits for the state and the Nigerian film industry as a whole”

“The development of a film city in Lagos is a multi-faceted opportunity with the potential to drive economic growth, cultural enrichment, and creative innovation. It can put Lagos and Nigeria on the map as a significant player in the global film and entertainment industry.”

Roll call of Nollywood veterans and notable theater practitioners that attended the ceremony included Alhaji Adebayo Salami, popularly known as Oga Bello; Prince Jide Kosoko, Tade Ogidan, Prof. Sola Fosudo, Adewale Elesho, Saheed Balogun, Kunle Afolayan, and Raymond Anyiam-Osigwe among others. There were movie directors and young filmmakers.

The event also had in attendance traditional rulers and members of the diplomatic community, who expressed their excitement seeing Lagos launching a world-class infrastructure to tap into the global entertainment market.
